Mayor of Godalming Steps into the World of Fashion!

The Mayor of Godalming, Councillor David Hunter, is holding a charity fashion show on Wednesday, 21 September 2016 at 6.30pm in Sainsbury's Café in Godalming to raise funds and awareness of Skillway, his chosen charity for his mayoral year.

Sainsbury's of Godalming are pitching in to organise this event which is open to all. Tickets are available from the Godalming store at a cost of £5.00 each to include the fashion show itself featuring clothes from the Sainsbury's Tu range and a scrumptious selection of cheese and wine from the Taste The Difference brand for people to sample. Raffle tickets will also be on sale with some fabulous prizes to be won. There are a limited number of tickets available for this event so don't delay – get yours now!

Cllr Hunter said "I wanted to hold a slightly different event to the usual fund-raising events and a fashion show sprang to mind; I wanted to be inclusive so we will be using a diverse selection of models for the evening. I have been bowled over by the help and enthusiasm shown by the team organising this event at Sainsbury's Godalming. I can't thank them enough."

Skillway is a Godalming-based charity that focuses on providing young people with a foundation in skills that they are not given the opportunity to excel in at school. Its training provides students with an introduction to develop key manual skills and encourages them to develop these skills further both at Skillway and through opportunities with further training and apprenticeships. This provides the additional benefits of building self-esteem, encouraging character development and an introduction to the real world of work.
